

GENERAL STRIKE IN U.S. IS THREATENED

Great Conspiracy Is Broken up by Federal Officers

[By Associated Press.]
Chicago.—Michigan's state syndicalism law was the first weapon used by federal authorities in breaking up what they termed one of the greatest radical and revolutionary conspiracies of recent years.
As 17 men, captured in a raid on their secret meeting in the woods of Berrien county, faced syndicalism charges at St. Joseph, William Z. Foster, head of the Trade Union Educational League, leader of the steel strike of 1919 and one of the foremost radicals of America, who was arrested here, awaited extradition to Michigan.
Meanwhile state and federal agents continued their search for 50 others said to have escaped when the secret meeting in the hills was broken up. Among those for whom the authorities were looking was Rosa Pastor Stokes, New York wealthy communist leader.
Awaiting extradition to Michigan, denied he had been at the meeting in Berrien county. He said he had not been away from Chicago during the last few days. He was arrested at his office, which was raided by State's Attorney Crowe Sunday night.
Mrs. Stokes Fugitive
Chief among those who were arrested in the raid on the meeting place at the forest, near near Bridgman was C. E. Ruthenberg, once a candidate for mayor of Cleveland.
Trailing some of those who escaped, detectives asserted the belief that Mrs. Stokes was among the fugitives. Efforts to locate her were redoubled Thursday.

The Road of Roses

Travel through miles of flowers—and on a railroad train! Cynics who affect to despise beauty for beauty's sake may find a lesson in the practice of a New England railroad. Roses are planted beside the tracks, glorifying the otherwise dreary night of way with masses of pink and red blossoms. The rose-bushes prevent erosion, thus protecting the tracks from slipping earth and rocks. They serve as well as beauty.

Blooming roses of kindness and good-will not only brighten the surroundings, but are an intensely practical asset in any life and any business.

Former Senator A. J. Hopkins Dead

Aurora, Ill.—Former United States Senator A. J. Hopkins, 65, for years a republican leader in congress, died Wednesday at his home here.
 Mr. Hopkins was elected to the lower house of congress nine successive times and then was chosen senator. He was recognized as one of the ablest lawyers of the state and when he left the senate resumed the practice of law.
 He graduated at Hilldale college, Michigan, in June, 1870, studied law and started practice at Aurora.
 During Mr. Hopkins' service in congress he was a member of the ways and means committee for 14 years and helped frame every tariff law from the McKinley bill to the Dingley law. He also was active in other legislation work. The Panama canal is a permanent evidence of his legislative work in the senate.

COLLINS TRAGEDY TROUBLES CAPITAL

Chaos in Europe, Added to Domestic Worries, Pile Up Load.

By DAVID LAWRENCE.
Copyright, 1922, by The Janesville Gazette.

Washington—Today was a day of blues in the national capital. The collapse of the peace negotiations between the belligerent nations and operators was totally unexpected.

Rumors from New York indicated that a majority in the rail executives would put to naught what had been accomplished thus far toward a settlement of the shopmen's strike. And on top of it all came the distressing news of the assassination of Michael Collins, as an ally of the reign of terror in Europe which has eliminated such conspicuous figures as Rathenau in Germany and Field Marshal Wilson in Great Britain.

For weeks, while the turmoil of European politics has been steadily setting worse, President Harding has been absorbed in domestic troubles and it took a shocking piece of news like the murder of Michael Collins, coming as it did so soon after the death of Wilbur Griffith, to make official Washington realize that the war in Ireland might make a serious difference in Great Britain's attitude toward continental problems and have the effect of further settlement of Europe's economic status which means so much to the establishment of American trade.

Watchful Working
Chaos in Ireland might tend to draw the attention of Britain from continental Europe and give France more latitude in dealing with Germany alone. All sorts of conjectures are being made here as to the drift of events in Europe but so far as the exercise of American influence is concerned, not a word is coming from the White House while the Secretary of State Hughes, leaves in a day or two on a voyage to Brazil to attend the exposition there. He will be gone for many weeks.

Domestic problems are naturally more acute, but the attitude of the present is one of watchful working. He had hoped the shopmen and rail executives could be brought together through the mediation of the brotherhood chiefs and has been disposed to keep hands off while the parleys proceeded. Mr. Harding has been criticized by both sides for his own efforts at mediation and the criticism for the moment has produced a policy of cautious waiting.

Expected Settlement
If there was one strike which the president thought could be settled quickly and satisfactorily it was the anthracite controversy. Mr. Harding has felt the miners and operators really did not want to disagree, but that the influence of the national miners' union was responsible as it was presumably desired to have a stronger leverage on the operators in the soft coal fields by tying up all coal production. The insistence of the anthracite owners on arbitration has halted the negotiations for the time being, and the White House is keenly disappointed.

Meanwhile a psychological factor has been thrust into the whole industrial situation which may complicate rather than clarify it. The sudden announcement of the United States steel corporation of an increase of 20 per cent in wages comes at a time when the shopmen are arguing that they have not been awarded a living wage by the United States railroad labor board's last decision.

Hold Reductions Necessary
The whole tendency heretofore in wages has been downward and the administration has kept on insisting that reductions in everything were necessary in the deflation process, while many politicians were inclined to think any increase in wages would help rally labor in the congressional campaign. They were not unmindful of the fears of business men that such progress as had been made in wage reductions might be imperilled by the tactics of the steel corporation.

This strengthens the belief that the move of the steel corporation was made without reference to any effect outside the steel industry and that it was occasioned entirely by the desperate need of the steel companies for labor. For Judge Gary is the last man in the business world to want to throw a monkey wrench into the wheels of industrial readjustment.

Economic Necessity
In connection with the raise in wages in the steel mills, the increase in wages of nonunion miners given by the companies in Pennsylvania who supply the steel industry was regarded also as an economic necessity rather than an attempt to break up unionism through the temptations of a higher wage scale. Nevertheless this is not dismissed as an isolated occurrence, as wage increases are fully expected in industries more or less related to the coal and steel business and it is known that at least one of the big steel trusts is contemplating the payment of wages higher than that proposed by the unions as one way of weakening national control by the unions.

Altogether the whole horizon is full of worries and troubles for the administration. Europe is unsettled and America keeps hands off. The rail and coal strikes are drifting without governmental influence being exerted and a fatigued congress is wrestling with the tariff and soldier bonus, either of which would be sufficient to consume the end of the thought and attention of an administration in the days of normalcy.

Electric Stove
Will Be Made at
Stafford Plant

Production of a new electric cook stove will be started at the Stafford Motor company in the near future, according to a statement made Wednesday by E. M. Coyle, manager of the local plant. The making of the stoves will be moved after the completion of about two years, since the old fireless cookers were being produced.

Mr. Coyle announced that for the past months his company has been experimenting with an electric cook stove, lately completed. At present officials are making final arrangements for the output of the different models.

The production of portable chairs at the factory will be continued, according to Mr. Coyle. Between 250 and 300 chairs are being made daily. It is expected this will be increased during the next few months. About 40 men are employed.

YOUTH TOO CRUDE
AT EXTORTION; IS
LANDED IN JAIL

(BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.)
Milwaukee.—His crudeness of operation at the time honored Blackhand method of extortion led to the arrest of Melvin Boehme, 17, Cedarburg youth, in the exclusive east side residential district of Milwaukee. Boehme was captured after a hand to hand struggle with detectives, who risked injury from a stiletto which he carried.

Boehme had written a note that was delivered by a small boy to Dr. Lewis Tisdale. It demanded that the doctor place $500 near the door of his garage at 9 p. m. Tuesday night or suffer the firing of his home and garage and the ultimate murder of himself and family.

Boehme told Captain McCoy he is the youngest of six children of William Boehme. The only person he could assign for attempting to obtain money from Dr. Tisdale was that he wanted the fun of spending it.

WON'T PUSH SHIP SUBSIDY AT ONCE

Harding Tells Mondell Delay Is Better Than Premature Action.

(BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.)

Washington.—President Harding will not press for immediate consideration by congress of the administration ship subsidy bill, believing it would be better to postpone action until "we can rivet the attention of congress with a full attendance" rather than "jeopardize its success" by consideration under the present circumstances.

The president's position was set forth in a letter Thursday to Representative Mondell, republican leader, who had written the executive that he and his associates were reluctant to bring the bill to a vote in the house at this time.

In addition to the diminished attendance in the house, "new complications" have arisen which "make a difficult situation," the president said, adding that "we must face the fact that friends of the bill must harmonize their views" regarding the "prohibition issue which came up so unexpectedly" and also reach an accord as to the tax exemption sections of the bill.

He expressed the hope that these difficulties could be solved and that congress would take favorable action on the bill before it "gets too deeply engaged in the pressing legislation which must be considered in the short session."

WILLARD S. HEDDLES.
When Willard S. Heddles died in Madison, Rock county lost one of her splendid specimens of manhood and the whole state a citizen of no mean attainments. Most of the early life, the part of his life which we may call the foundation and a large part of the superstructure as well, was laid here in Rock county and Edgerton is keenly aware of a personal loss in his death. He was born in the town of Porter at a time when tobacco growing was not largely developed. Later about the time Willard Heddles was arriving at man's estate the raising of tobacco had become an important industry and he entered the business of growing and marketing the crop as did many other men from Porter and Fulton—men who are still living or whose names are closely allied with tobacco marketing.

Willard Heddles was a man of high character, an executive of great ability, untiring and just such a man as is always placed at the head of those public movements requiring diplomacy and perseverance. When funds were to be raised for some worthy purpose Willard Heddles was the man to "put it over." His war record was not on the field of battle but in the home work, as a member and chairman of the Council of Defense and in backing up his government in the job of winning the war he never was A. W. O. L. Communities always need such men. It is hard for a long time after they have gone from earthly scenes, to replace them or to fill the vacancy they leave.

MICHAEL COLLINS
Griffith dead! Michael Collins dead! Assassination, ambush and murder. Guerilla warfare with bridges blown up, buildings burned, homes destroyed, fields laid waste—this is unhappy Ireland. Boland dead with a gun in his hand and another man his person. DeValera a fugitive or hiding with the irregulars. It would seem that the hour had come for a truce and that Ireland pause before its property and its people were utterly destroyed. Collins was a genius. He fought bravely for a free Ireland. But he had more than a mere fanatic's vision. He saw that Ireland would be destroyed if the warfare went on with Britain and his voice was among the strongest for peace and the Free State. In that service, ambushed by his own brethren of the Sinn Fein, he fell with a bullet through his brain. "Forgive them," he said as he passed away and another sacrifice had been made.

Collins was a remarkable character. He possessed youth, a bravery beyond question, elements of statesmanship even more developed than in Griffith, and a dash that appealed to the youth and the aged in Ireland. He was a formidable antagonist in debate, not and worsted DeValera in the last conflict over the acceptance of Free State government by the many high attributes of leadership.

What is to happen? Are the irregulars and the Free State troops to go on with murder and assassination indefinitely until all that is left of the island is a shell with a few old and feeble noncombatants remaining? Or shall the tragedy of Collins' death call a halt and a truce, with eventual settlement? On one hand is the continuation of civil war; on the other a Free State and nothing else. Should the irregulars win and De Valera be at the head of a provisional government, the agreement with Great Britain would be broken. The next step would be the return of the British troops and another series of those outrages which burned the blushing cheek of the world. It would seem that the hour had arrived when Mr. DeValera could show the world that he was a genuine hero and not a mere ambition serving person, by calling off the irregular army, sounding the note of peace and permitting the Free State to carry on as it has been planned by the Dail and by Griffith and Collins.

Several suits by candidates may have to be brought for non-support.

What is the matter with the Chicago and Northwestern railroad officials that they are so fearful of newspaper reporters? They have barred the Gazette from the South Janesville dead line and secrecy is the big feature. Is the road fearful of the truth? From the time the striking shipmen have been out the Gazette has been given the news freely and frankly by the strikers' publicity committee. The business of the Gazette is to print the news—to tell the story as it is and to deal with facts as they appear. Is the Northwestern afraid of such a policy?

Washington's Slums Alley
By FREDERIC J. HASKIN
Washington — Goat alley, Pig alley, and Casey's court are not inventions of moving picture producers. They are the addresses of a number of people in the nation's capital. Congress is being urged to sweep such places from the map of Washington and leave them entirely to tenement fiction.
Washington is generally known as a city without slums. Certainly no tourist to the capital ever saw any conditions such as New York's east side openly displays. Washington has no slum district, it is true. But through the city, like hidden sores, run tortuous alleyways, with rows of shacks crowded with humanity, mostly colored.

An investigator who spent six months living in one of the alleys gave the following as a typical instance of bad conditions: A four room alley home sheltered 15 persons. The mother of the home had had 19 children. Her five grown daughters would illegitimate children. One son was in the insane asylum. One of the daughters was dying of tuberculosis. Another was in jail for cutting a man and a woman.

According to the story, when this last daughter was a little girl, "she begged from door to door saying that her dead mother lay awaiting burial in their desolate home, or that the family lived in the country where all their possessions had just been destroyed by fire."

The alley situation in Washington is unusual. There are 224 inhabited alleys, the homes of 16,500 people. In another American city this condition would have been made a political issue long ago. The necessary funds would have been raised. But Washington must wait on congress, and congress is constantly busy with national affairs and always anxious to economize. It takes money and careful planning to revise a city and to move 16,500 of the poorest people in it without panic or great disorder.

The system started in a queer way. Washington was laid out in deep lots, with plenty of back yard space. Lanes between lots became alleyways veining the center of a square. Out-houses were built in some of the back yards and servants sometimes were quartered there.

When the Civil war ended large numbers of soldiers were in Washington and wooden barracks were built for them in some of this back yard space. The soldiers left, but thirty or forty thousand negroes came swarming into the government headquarters and the barracks were eagerly taken over for homes. A few of these Civil war barracks are still standing and inhabited. Other negroes found shacks in alleyways.

Domestic servants were in demand in Washington and houses were built for them on the back lots. In time these lots often became entirely separated from the property facing the street. Rows of alley houses were bought up by land sharks because they brought in good profits.

William Deane Ham, member of the citizens housing committee, says these shacks are operating today. They own long rows of alley homes, and derive large incomes from the rents. A four room house in one of these rows is valued at about $400. It rents on an average for $12 a month. In other words every three years the tenants more than pay for the houses they rent, and some of them lived in their shacks for 50 years.

Most of the houses are tumble down wooden or brick structures. Not all the alley dwellers of Washington are negroes. A stone's throw from the beautiful grounds of the capital are some of the most congested districts. Poor foreigners who come into Washington through the nearby union station settle down in these lodgings.

Vice and crime are bred in these internal streets, welfare workers say. Often the entrance to an alley is by a narrow courtyard. Beyond this cul de sac the alley broadens and winds and branches. There are alleys within alleys. Police cannot patrol these "streets" closely because the force is not large enough to permit men's being detailed to alleys only.

As for disease, investigators have reported whole rows of alley houses known as lung blocks, where tuberculosis is found in four houses out of every five. Other have periodical typhoid. There is the back kick to the situation. Washington is getting its cleaning and cooking and washing done by the alley dwellers, and getting them perhaps a little cheaper than if the workers lived in the suburbs and had to pay carfare out of their earnings. But the city is exposing itself to the diseases that prey on the people of the hidden slums.

Washing for "the best homes" is done in the alley shacks. People go out of houses where there are cases of fevers, tuberculosis and typhoid, to work all over the city.

Some of the shacks are built with the back yards of fine residences. The alleys are just far enough away sufficiently shut off by board fences to be disregarded by the people who live facing the streets. But the alley dwellers are at the same time just close enough for diseases to spread.

So far, however, the dangers and the wrongs of the alley system have been tolerated. The city does the best it can with the laws and ordinances on the books. But any radical steps rest with congress. The commissioners of the district are now taking an active interest in the situation.

Several years ago congress passed a law to close the alleys houses on a fixed date. When the time drew near an extension was obtained. It was argued that the city could not absorb so many people moving at the same time.

JUST FOLKS

LAST NIGHT THE BABY CRIED
Last night the baby cried. And I, Roused from a sound and soothing sleep, Wondered to hear that little cry.
For ten long years in slumber deep I've lived my nights, so it seemed That what I'd heard I'd only dreamed.
For ten long years a banging tale, The milkman's whistle or the horn Of motors driven at rapid rate, Have wakened me at early dawn; But late last night a baby cry, Thinking I'd heard a baby cry.

I leaned upon my elbow there And wondered did I dream or not? But once again upon the air The call came from her tiny cot! Then peacefully I turned and smiled To hear the crying of our child.
Lonely and still the house had seemed For ten long years, but once again We have the joy of which we'd dreamed— The joy which many seek in vain! Oh, happy, happy home, thought I, That wakes to hear a baby cry.

A SLICE OF WRITING
I sent a story to an editor. He returned it. "All wrong," I sent it to another. "Very fine, but wrong style," I sent it to another. "Good, but not good enough," I sent it to another. "Excellent, but an old subject," I sent it to another. "Style bad, subject hackneyed," I waited two months, then I changed the title and I sent it to the third editor. "Very fine," he said, "and accepted it, and so it never pays in this business To get mad and quit. Editors reverse their verdicts. They don't know good stuff When they see it."

We know a man who is going to make a lot of money. He is going to bottle coal this coming winter.

Ambassador Geddes says the English do not understand America. But, even with this lack of understanding, most of them are willing to tell us how to solve our problems.

MARCELEITE
He sat at the window and watched the moon. It was late and the city before him was slumbering. Clouds after clouds flitted by. The moon shone brightly and did not seem to mind the clouds—beautiful as they were.

He could not sleep. He had troubles and his thoughts were blue—even as the sky. He was getting more and more so.

Then there came to him a thought. This moon at which he was gazing had been there for generations. The very same moon had been gazed at by Caesar, Napoleon, Shakespeare and many others. His sense of humor came back to him and he smiled to himself.

Infinitesimal that he was, he still could laugh—and when you can laugh, you belong to the scheme of the whole and it is worth while—Marcel Steinbrugg.

Who's Who Today
JAMES F. PERSHING JR.
The recent resignation of James Pershing Jr., nephew of Gen. Pershing, as assistant prohibition director of New York attracted nationwide attention. Like his illustrious uncle Pershing Jr. is not given to loquaciousness. He simply announced that "the job was distasteful" to him.

Pershing Jr. was asked to accept the post last February. He succeeded Herbert G. Catron, former treasurer of the National Prohibition party, who was indicted for alleged liquor frauds. The Anti-Saloon League recommended Pershing when he was appointed by Director Ralph A. Day. William H. Anderson, New York state superintendent of the league, in recommending Pershing said he was well qualified to handle the details of the work with a clear vision.

SIGNS OF DISEASED TONSILS.
In a remarkable study of five thousand children before and after removal of their tonsils, which I shall refer to in greater detail in a subsequent talk, Dr. Albert D. Kuiser of Rochester, N. Y., groups the children thus:
1. Children who had clinically enlarged tonsils with clinical evidence of infection, 3,653, 73 per cent.
2. Children who had enlarged tonsils without clinical evidence of infection, 176, 23 per cent.
3. Children whose tonsils appeared normal yet presented to the physician evidence of infection, 1,142, 22.5 per cent.
4. Children with tonsils of normal appearance, and no evidence of infection, 59, 1 per cent.
"Evidence of infection" means that when examined by the physician or throat specialist the tonsils were found to be diseased; they harbored deposits of food or disease germs.
Another table given in Dr. Kuiser's report shows the complaints previous to operation in the 5,000 children with diseased tonsils:
1. Mouth breather, 3,567, 72 per cent.
2. Frequent sore throat, 2,870, 57 per cent.
3. Frequent colds, 2,305, 46 per cent.
4. Enlarged lymph nodes in neck, 2,182, 42 per cent.
5. Ear trouble, 1,131, 22 per cent.
6. Frequent attacks of fever, 928, 9 per cent.
7. Joint pains ("growing pains"), 200, 4 per cent.
8. The "frequent sore throat" and "frequent colds" mean that a child with diseased tonsils is much more susceptible to any and all of the respiratory infections, including such diseases as diphtheria, scarlet fever, measles, pneumonia, meningitis and infantile paralysis, than is a child with normal tonsils who has had dis-eased tonsils removed.
The "growing pains" means that a child with diseased tonsils is much more susceptible to joint disease, for instance acute infectious arthritis, rheumatism, rheumatic fever, inflammatory rheumatism and multiple arthritis) and to the complication of endocarditis or valvular heart disease, which so frequently occurs in a child with healthy tonsils or a child whose diseased tonsils have been removed. "Growing pains" generally signify absorption of septic or poisonous matter from a septic focus or depot of infection (nest of disease germs) in the tonsils. Remember that a child's tonsils may harbor such a septic focus or several foci yet appear healthy to the ordinary observer. A child's tonsils may be the source of serious systemic disease yet not be enlarged. A child's tonsils may appear enlarged yet not cause any injury to the child's general health or development. Finally, a child's tonsils may be neither enlarged nor infected (diseased) in any way, yet the child may suffer from mouth breathing due to the obstruction of the nasal breathing route by a very large adenoid body, which is practically a third tonsil situated up out of casual sight behind the soft palate on the roof of the pharynx or throat.
"Ear trouble" means not merely earache, but running ear and deafness. The usual cause of earache, discharge, ear or deafness in children is some nose or throat condition such as diseased tonsils or adenoids. But remember that 1,412 of these children who suffered from diseased tonsils were not mouth breathers.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.
Did Tonsils Old Woman.
These not days I let our 18 months old baby play in the sandy yard and in the house with nothing but his own cloth on. Friend husband insists that this practice is unhealthful well as immoral. What do you say about it? (Mrs. S. P.)
Answer—I congratulate the baby on his choice of mothers, but I—well, you say it. I don't like to call a man names unless I am sure he is a little fellow.
Eating Before Bedtime.
Is eating before retiring an injury to health?
Answer—Only for over nourished folks. For skinny folks and those who take a reasonable amount of general exercise daily, a bedtime lunch or meal is very wholesome. The natural disposition of the body is to sleep. Tonsils to the contrary arise from the evils of over indulgence and drinking coffee and alcoholic beverages late at night.

Put on the Nose Dax.
I am about to start on a vacation trip. I have been depending on wheat bran, which I eat with my cereal every morning, to prevent constipation. I can't get bran in the sleeping car, but I can get a bit of bran in the wagon behind the seat. Or carry along a can of whole wheat bran, which I can wash down with water or other beverage, each morning. Bran is obtainable everywhere.
Burning Sugar and Vinegar.
Does burning sugar and vinegar in a room in the morning tend to purify the air? (M. S.)
Answer—No, it creates an odor, perhaps a healthy one, but it is a harmless odor for some disagreeable and perhaps equally harmless one.

Q. Have King Ferdinand and Queen Marie of Roumania ever been crowned? H. K. N.
A. The coronations are being made for this ceremony. They were on the eve of coronation when the world war involved the kingdom.
Q. Approx of the present reduction in wages of railroad employees, have the salaries of the employees been reduced since March 1, 1921? H. W. J.
A. The railroad labor board, under the transportation act, does not have jurisdiction over the salaries of executive officials of the roads. The only way that such salaries could be reduced at the same time that wages are cut would be by action of the board of directors of each company. The board deals with the wages of the employees and subordinate officials only. There is no public record of any reduction of executives' salaries since the railroad wages were returned to private operation, March 1, 1920.
Q. How long did the Reign of Terror last? A. D. E.

Q. What is the value of dairy products produced last year? E. P. G.
A. The department of agriculture says that the value of dairy products on farms in 1921 was $2,410,000,000, a drop of 20 per cent from 1920.
Q. How long have we had reform schools in this country? E. C. H.
A. The first reformatory managed under legislative control was the one established in New York in 1824, known as the New York House of Refuge.
Q. What reforms were advocated or promulgated by the progressive party in 1912?
A. It was pledged to direct election of United States senators, direct primaries, direct election of delegates

The Cross-Cut

A Serial Story of the Colorado Mines

By Courtney Ryley Cooper.

SYNOPSIS

At Thornton Fairchild's death his son Robert learns there has been a dark period in his father's life which for almost 30 years has caused him to suffer. The secret is hinted at in a document left by the elder Fairchild, which also informs Robert of the true owner of the mines in Colorado, and advising him to see Harry Beaumont, a lawyer.

Beaumont tells Robert his claim is a silver mine and warns him against a certain man, "Squint Rodaine," his father's enemy. Robert goes to the mining town and finds an old friend of his father's in "Mother" Howard, keeper of a boarding house where his father had stayed. He also rescues a girl from a predicament and is turned away by Harry Beaumont.

Harry, an old Colorado partner of his father's, turns up and they visit the mine together. He is filled with awe. Fairchild discovers that the girl he had rescued on the Denver road was the daughter of Squint Rodaine. Harry and Robert are warned to go home.

Fairchild went back into the tunnel, spun the dynamite, and the gasoline engines and started them revving again. That the last of the water might be drained from the shaft before the pumps must be returned to their owners.

Several hours passed, then Harry returned, minus his gorgeous clothing and his diamond ring, dressed in mining costume now, with high leather boots into which his trousers were tucked and carrying a carbine lantern. Doefully he looked at the vacant anger where once a diamond had sparkled. Then he chuckled.

"Sam took it back," he announced. "And I took part of the money and paid it out for rent on these pumps. We can keep 'em as long as we want 'em. It's only costing about a fourth of what I might expect. Drownin' work, some of it," he laughed again. Fairchild joined him, then sobered.

"I brought Rodaine out of the bushes," he said. "Squint threatened us after they'd hauled you down town on the rail."

Harry winked jovially. "Ain't it just what I expected? It's better that way than to 'ave 'im snoopin' around."

They chuckled together then; it was something to know that they had not only forced Squint Rodaine to show his enmity openly, but it was something more to make him the instigator of helping them with their work. Harry looked down the hole, intently at nothing, then turned to the rusty hoist.

"Bro's the thing we've got to fix up now. This 'ere chiv whels all out of gear."

"What makes your face so red?" Fairchild asked the question as the be-mustached visage of Harry came nearer to the carbide. Harry looked up.

"You mean?"

"Shall be Mrs. Maurice Rodaine. She loves 'er father enough to do it after 'er will's broken."

"Again Robert Fairchild filed an oil pump again, then he said to the hoist. Then he straightened.

"How are we going to work this mine?" he asked shortly. Harry stared at him.

"Ow should I know? You own it."

"I don't mean that way. We were fifty-fifty from the minute you showed up. This mine has been any one's business in my mind."

"Fifty-fifty? You're making me a bloated capitalist."

"I hope I will. Or rather, I hope that you'll make such a thing possible for both of us. But I was talking about something else; are we going to work hard and fight it out day and night for a while until we can get things clear, or are we just going to let 'em easy terms?"

"Suppose," answered Harry after a communication with his magic mustache, "that we go day and night 'til we get the water out of the mine. Then we'll have to work together. You'll need my vast store of learning and enlightenment!" he grinned.

And the pumping will last through tomorrow night. Can you take the night track?"

"Sure. But why?"

"I want to go to that dance!"

Harry grinned. Harry's lips spread into a grin.

"And she's got brown eyes!" he chorled to himself. "And she's got brown hair and she's a wee about 'er. Oh, she's got a wee about 'er. I'll get into the mine with Maurice Rodaine. Oh! She's got a wee about 'er."

"Oh, shut up!" growled Fairchild, but he grinned at the thought of the dance. Harry poured out a can of oil upon the bearings of the chiv wheel with almost loving tenderness.

"She's got a wee about 'er!" he echoed. Fairchild suddenly frowned.

GRAIN

Chicago Review. Took a downward slant here Thursday in sympathy with lower quotations at Liverpool. There was a general local and commission house selling at the start but support was lacking. The market was rather an easy undertone. Buying of the December delivery at $1.02 1/2 by local buyers. There was a general demand at the seaboard was reported as very slow on account of the weakness in exchange. The market was quiet at practically all points to the dollar. The opening, which ranged from $1.02 1/2 to $1.03 1/2, was followed by a slight advance all around, then by a somewhat of a reaction. The market was quiet on the whole, with short covering and general buying induced by the strength in corn. Coming Back Here

What production in Wisconsin is "coming back" is the wheat crop. R. A. Moore, agronomist at the College of Agriculture says so. During the past year the wheat acreage of the state was tripled. A half century ago Wisconsin was one of the great wheat producing states. There came the chinch bug and the rust, and the wheat crop was almost wiped out. The soil was left fallow and the wheat crop was almost wiped out. The soil was left fallow and the wheat crop was almost wiped out.

Janesville Tennis Players Lose to Stoughton, 3 to 2

PINCHING SHOES
KEEP NOWLAN OUT
OF SINGLES PLAY

Busy Man's Sport Page

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE]
Stoughton-Janesville tennis players paid a visit here Wednesday afternoon. They returned to Janesville having won the short end of 3 to 2 match score.
The story would have been different, however, except for a pair of new shoes. The "kicks" were upon the feet of Merrill Nowlan, but should have graced the nether extremities of a dandier lad.
Nowlan, paired with George Bennett, sailed through the doubles in great shape. The couple met and defeated L. C. Curran and G. Mathison. They took the first set, 6-5. The second was tied, 4-4, and then they annexed the match with the third, 6-4.
When it came time to enter the singles, Nowlan was in pain. The skin was off one heel and the flesh bleeding. He was unable to withdraw. The consolation singles title holder of Wisconsin and undergraduate champion of the University of the Wisconsin, met G. Mathison in the singles. The first set went to Nowlan, 2-6, but he came back with his usual characteristic dashing tactics and garnered in the next two, 6-2 and 6-4.
Sam McKelvey of the Janesville club took one of three sets in singles from the Lovoy. That was the second, when he hammered him, 6-0. He lost the first and third, 3-6 and 2-6.
In the other doubles match, Lovoy and Owen defeated Claude Bennett and McKelvey, 6-2, 6-2.

BY FRANK SINGLARI
FOOTBALL teams in high and other prep schools should be on a higher plane during the coming season. Special schools conducted by members of the Big Ten have trained many coaches during the summer in the technique of the game and the best methods of presenting this information to green and even veteran material. The same will be true of basketball. It is also expected, that because of this, track-long too neglected in high schools—will see a spurt during the 1922-23 season.

IN BIDDING goodbye to the students at the University of Michigan coaching school, Director Yost said: "Athletics in high schools, whether they are in the technique of the game or the best methods of presenting this information to green and even veteran material, is also expected, that because of this, track-long too neglected in high schools—will see a spurt during the 1922-23 season."

YOST hit the nail squarely on the head. It is ridiculous that where boys play in true sportsmanship, handball is less likely among the fans, where clean sports are played, gentlemenly conduct among spectators. Both must go hand in hand. Fortunately, Southern Wisconsin has seen very little of the objectionable.

THIS is a timely topic. Within another few weeks, practice will start on the high school grid-irons. The first call for Janesville high candidates has already been issued. With the Rock River Valley High School Athletic association taking the reins in seven cities, let the public plan to cooperate with the officials to boost prep athletics and keep them on the highest level.

THE UNIVERSITY of Wisconsin and other members of the Big Ten will naturally benefit by these advanced steps. Such conditions of sportsmanship as were uncovered during the past year will be lessened by starting with the high school lads and instilling in them proper appreciation of the true value of athletics.

Diamond Sparkles — Yankees, held to five hits in two games by Frisco, pitcher, relinquished hold on American league lead to St. Louis. In second game of series with Cleveland, Cleveland held Yankees to three hits and won 4 to 1, while Frisco's shutout Cubs 6 to 0. — Cobb's Tigers suffered first defeat of week, falling before Athletics, 8 to 3, and Washington trounced White Sox, 11 to 3.

Boyd Duncan, professional, shattered 200 straight targets.

Whiskaway fourth at Saratoga, Rockinminster winning.

Hennessy, Indianapolis, and Westbrook, Detroit, push Australian tennis doubles players but less.

BRINGING UP FATHER

Pongo, Janesville Born, in Baseball "to the End"

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS]
Minneapolis—With nearly all but 15 years of his life spent in ball game, the major part as a manager, Joe (Pongo) Cantillon, pudgy, red-faced pilot of the Minneapolis American association team, is still going strong as a leader of the diamond at the age of 55.

"Pongo" will complete his 55th year on August 19, according to the best information, but several baseball records have him as several years older. Questioning him on the matter is as delicate a task as similarly interrogating a feminine voter.

JOE (PONGO) CANTILLON

Asked many times the secret of his success, Pongo would say: "There is no secret to it. Baseball is my business, like any other business one may have. I am playing the game and fighting."

His shrill "steady n-o-w" from the coaching lines is his characteristic utterance as coach. Known throughout the baseball world, Cantillon's presence in the coach's box always draws many hands of applause.

"To the End"
Inquisitorial remarks as to how long he would remain in the game have brought forth the replies that he is in the game "until they put me out."

"It's my life and I love it. I'd be lost without it," he answered.

Much of Cantillon's success in the game is due to his unerring ability to rehabilitate many old players who have been declared "passed" by the majors. His aggregations have come in for unfavorable comment several years because of the alleged "work-years" on his team, castoffs from the big leagues.

His first pennant given Minneapolis in 1910, his initial year for the team, was won with a team of many former "big show" stars. And his team today consists of many "old-timers," such as Bonneau, Cravath, Schauer, Magee, Owens, Yerington, Jordan, Jennings, and until recently, Russell.

Started at Janesville
According to the best information obtainable, Joe Cantillon was born August 19, 1867, at Janesville. He attended school there. At the age of 12, he received his first baseball position when his brother "Bill" made him mascot for the Janesville team.

When he was 16, he learned the Rockford, Ill., team was in need of a first baseman, and with complete confidence in himself applied for the position. His tale was a stumbling block and the manager refused to take him on, but on his insistence, he was given a trial and made good.

In 1883, he went to Green Bay and played, and for the next few years was a member of several baseball nines in the neighboring Wisconsin towns.

His first managerial duties at Burlington in 1888 were followed by similar positions at Oakland, Cal., in 1889; Rock Island, Ill., in 1893; Duquesne, Pa., in 1894 and Columbus in 1895. Then he became an umpire in the major leagues and served until 1906.

He entered the American Association in 1904 as manager for Milwaukee and remained for three years. Then he went to Washington to lead the Senators for three years. He returned to the A. A. in 1910 as manager of the Millers.

Known as a sociable and amiable person, Cantillon is liked by his players despite his marked tendency to speak candidly.

Faith and Deuce Win Geneva Races

Lake Geneva — Two minutes was all that stood between Faith, Johnny Buckstaff's Oshkosh 38 foot sloop, and victory in the third class A race of the inland lakes regatta here Wednesday. The race was called off at the end of the allowed three hour period with the Oshkosh yacht but two minutes from the home buoy.

Lack of wind marred the third day of the regatta, although the tiny catboats in class C succeeded in negotiating the course. Deuce, Coleman brothers' Lake Geneva boat, led the big field in a slow race with Go to It, W. Giljohan's boat, from Pewaukee Lake Yacht club, a close second. The winner's time was 1:22:07.

Other catboats to finish:
Nereid, Lindley, Minneapolis, time 1:32:00.
Eleanor G. J. Brander, Hartford, Wis., time 1:25:07.

Mrs. H. Bryan, Bismarck, N. D., to drive in Hamilton, Minn., harness races.

Unusually Slow Time at Madison Harness Events

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE]
Madison—Evidence that the capital city track is slow was given positively Wednesday. One heat in the 2:05 pace, expected to be the time breaker of the week, went as slowly as 2:14.

The 2:05 was taken by Red Laurence, third place winner in the same event at Janesville two weeks ago. Ora Main, fourth place taker at the Bowerly, captured the first heat with Red Laurence taking the next three at sight.

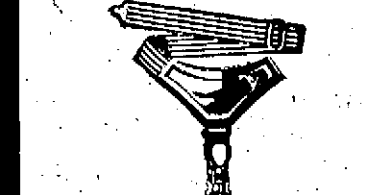

"Hank" Thomas again featured Wednesday. With Jay Bond, third place winner in the 2:14 at Janesville, he annexed the 2:10 pace. There is some discussion of the "jacks" action in the third heat. Many followers of the horses declare Jay Bond was distanced in that heat. General Baldwin, winner of the 2:14 at Janesville, took only the third heat.

General Byng, second place in the 2:14 trot at Janesville, won the same event here. George Azoff being first in the second heat.
